

Home How-To Program

Judy Polian explains that, despite owning her University Heights home for the last 36 years, she came to our Home How-To women's repair program "a confused novice." She had tried to learn about her home by reading, but that only confused her more. She found the lectures and hands-on practice with tools and repair techniques enlightening and empowering.

"Knowledge is power," Judy asserts. As a result of the course, "I am not as scared about home maintenance as I was upon entering the program. I know how to talk to contractors and I know what they are talking about."

She particularly praises the volunteer instructors. "No question was too mundane or silly. They answered every question with the upmost patience and knowledge. I learned from the questions that other women asked."

Judy would definitely recommend the program to other women homeowners. "I found myself signing up for all of the modules because I learned so much from the presented information. This program has saved me money, both in enabling my ability to tackle more home projects but also in knowing what some of the contractors' jargon is. In every respect, the price is worth it."
