

Project Repair Workshops

Emily Hamburg & Rob Shields read about HRRC in the Plain Dealer, visited our website, and were excited to learn that our repair workshops were open to residents of all communities. Having purchased their first home in South Euclid home three years ago, they were eager to learn how to make repairs and improvements.

“We came to a bunch of classes last fall,” explains Emily, “and, as a result of our first workshop on caulking and weatherization, we ordered an energy audit. Since then, we’ve been using the skills we learned to follow up on the recommendations of the auditor.”

They continue, “We’ve made great progress weatherizing our house. We have directly used the information we learned to weatherstrip doors, wrap pipes, and seal up gaps – a lot of hammer/nail/glue/caulking stuff.” They have been particularly impressed by the quality of the instructors. “The instructors have been good first contacts, people who are trustworthy and willing to donate time to HRRC.”

Rob and Emily are eager to spread the word about HRRC’s workshops. “The classes have been really great for helping us become more confident in a hands-on environment, in doing basic things. We’ve told a lot of people about the classes and encouraged them to check out HRRC.”
