Tricia Dykers-Koenig explains her long-term support for HRRC by saying, “Home Repair Resource Center is an organization that has our community’s well-being at the heart of its existence, and I share that commitment.” She believes that it is important that Cleveland Heights remain a diverse and vibrant community. “HRRC,” she continues, “is critical to that purpose.”

Tricia and her husband moved to Cleveland Heights in 1985 to serve as co-pastors of Noble Road Presbyterian Church. From that experience, she knows how important it is that nonprofits be able to count on steady income to pursue their mission. In 2009, Tricia changed from once-yearly gifts to monthly donations scheduled through Network for Good. “It was a way to indicate our family’s higher level of commitment to HRRC,” she explains, “and make sure our support didn’t fall through the cracks. Plus, it’s easier!”

Tricia now works for the Covenant Network for Presbyterians, an advocacy group for inclusion of sexual minorities, and her husband commutes home from New York. They remain committed to Cleveland Heights.
